From Nepal to Germany: A Journey of Strength and Transformation

Dear Friends,

This month, we share a story of courage and rebirth. Two of our sisters, Isha and Maya—survivors of child sex trafficking—journeyed from Nepal to Germany to attend Tony Robbins’ seminar Unleash the Power Within. Their voyage was not simply across borders, but beyond fear, into the discovery of their own power.

This opportunity was made possible by your unwavering support. The lessons they brought home now ripple through every corner of our shelter, lighting new paths of strength and possibility.

A Shared Light

When Isha and Maya came home, they carried a quiet radiance. Their laughter rings differently now; lighter, freer. They remind the younger girls that healing is possible, that hope can be learned, and that strength grows when shared.

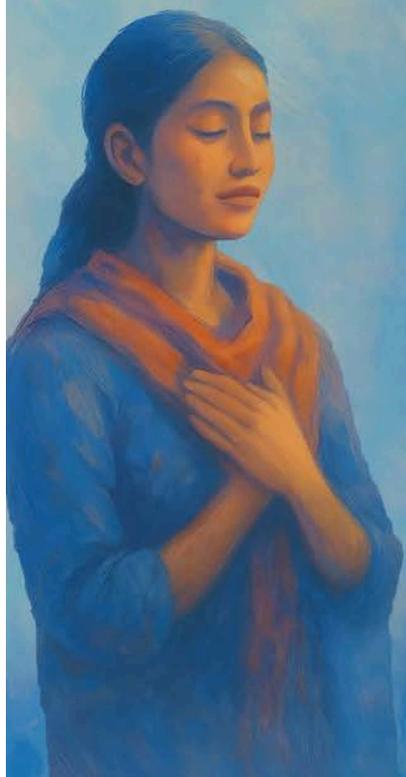

Isha’s Journey: Discovering Calm and Courage

When Isha first stepped into the stadium in Germany, she was overwhelmed by sound and light. She had imagined quiet meditation; instead, she found thousands of people roaring with hope.

“I used to live with fear and anger,” she shared. “Now I choose patience, forgiveness, and the courage to speak.”

Listening to stories of pain transformed into purpose, Isha began to see her scars as symbols of survival. She returned home practicing calmness each day, forgiving those who hurt her, and working to learn English so she can one day share her own story. For her, Germany was not a trip abroad; it was a homecoming to herself.

Maya's Journey: Walking Through Fire into Hope

For Maya, every moment felt like a dream. Meeting survivors from India in Doha reminded her that healing has no borders. The most powerful moment came when she saw a young survivor from India speak before thousands.

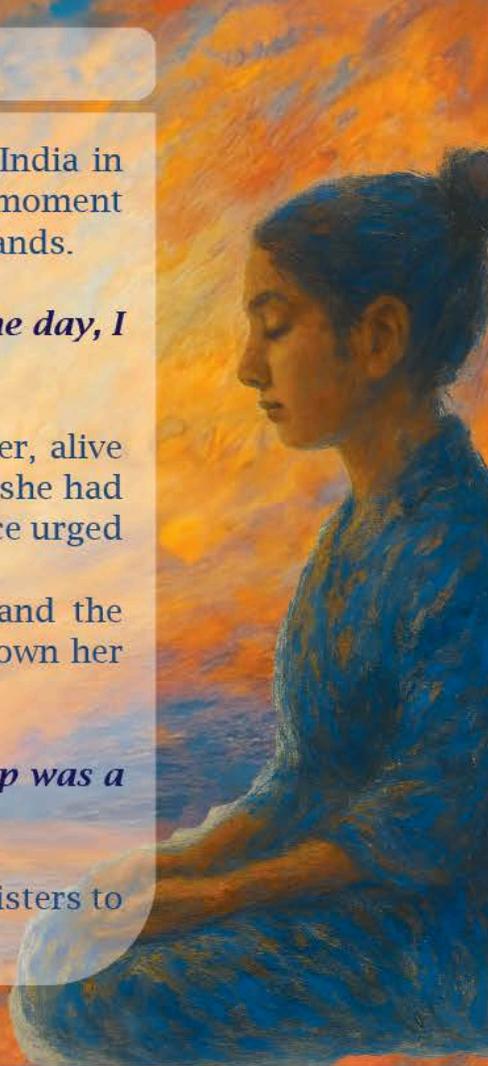

"She had known pain like us," Maya said. "Yet she stood proud. One day, I will do the same."

Then came the fire walk. Rows of burning coals stretched before her, alive and fierce. She froze, fear tightening her chest. Every voice of doubt she had ever heard rose within her. Yet somewhere deep inside, a quieter voice urged her to step forward.

With trembling feet, she walked. Heat surged through her body, and the world fell silent. When she reached the other side, tears streamed down her face, not from pain but from release.

"It felt as if my past was burning away," she said softly. "Each step was a promise that I will never be afraid to live again."

Since her return, Maya studies with renewed focus. She reminds her sisters to keep moving, to forgive, and to never let fear stand in their way.

A Note of Gratitude

Dear friends in Calgary, your kindness made this journey possible. You did not just provide safety; you gave wings to their dreams. From Nepal to Germany, your compassion traveled with them, and now it blooms here, in every heart that dares to hope again.
